

How To Unblock Web Sites

Tuesday, 28 October 2008

Some countries, schools and offices block access to web sites such as MySpace and Facebook. This is a limitation of freedom. The Internet should be a place where access to information is easy for anyone. Proxies can be used to unblock web sites by hiding your web surfing data. This prevents network filters from being able to see what you are doing. The idea is to connect to the proxy first, then use that to hide your connection to the blocked site.

Try using VectroProxy to bypass restrictions. This does have some limitations such as not being able to view videos, log in to MySpace or post comments.

For much more advanced access that allows the use of all features and lets you use your web browser as you normally do, try VectroTunnel.
